Based on the role of the Saudi Center for Commercial Arbitration in preparing young people to practice international commercial arbitration, and the importance of youth in advancing the arbitration industry, the SCCA launched the SCCA Arabic Moot, targeting students at Sharia and law schools. The first edition was open to teams from universities in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. The participants competed by arguing a hypothetical arbitration case simulating international commercial cases, thus honing the legal skills that the participants would need in order to argue before international arbitration tribunals. giving them a comprehensive view of the nature and proceedings of such cases, and encouraging them to study international commercial law, commercial arbitration, and arbitration law because arbitration is important as a means of alternative dispute resolution in commercial matters. Through the Arabic Moot, participants also gain necessary practical skills and come into contact with figures such as distinguished international arbitrators and elite law firms, which opens the door to recruitment and hiring for outstanding student competitors.

Watch a short video introduction of the Arabic Moot and its objectives at this link.

Objectives of the SCCA Arabic Moot:

Practical application of studies to a real-world scenario

Familiarization with international arbitration rules and procedures

Exemplifying the importance of rules and procedures in order to understand and practice arbitration

Strengthening presentation and recall skills for arbitration sessions

Creating and encouraging a spirit of fair competition among students in their efforts to reach the final stages of the competition

A better, more professional, more specialized future for the arbitration industry (especially institutional arbitration) in the region

Developing students' public speaking abilities, self-confidence, and written and oral argument skills, all of which arbitrators and lawyers need to present and defend their position in arbitration cases

The Commercial Law Development Program (CLDP), established in 1992, is a division of the U.S. Department of Commerce that helps to raise legal awareness in developing countries, particularly in the area of international trade, by participating in the development of international commercial policies and laws. In the past 10 years, the CLDP has organized international legal competitions across the Middle East and the Arab world that have contributed to boosting Arab participation in the Willem C. Vis International Commercial Arbitration Moot and improving the performance of young practitioners in legal and commercial spaces.

The SCCA Arabic Moot is divided into two major stages

Stage 1

Written Submissions

After publication of the case, the participating teams prepare memoranda with the arguments by the claimant and the respondent in the case, which they deliver electronically using a special form by the deadlines published at www.ArabicMoot.sadr.org.

Stage 2

Oral Proceedings

The teams compete through oral arguments on behalf of the claimant and the respondent before arbitration tribunals composed of local and international practitioners experienced in international commercial arbitration.

In order to introduce the SCCA Arabic Moot to target groups at universities, the SCCA held three events to launch and introduce the competition in three primary regions of Saudi Arabia (Central, Western, and Eastern). Deans, professors, and students from Saudi Sharia and law schools were invited to attend. This increased awareness of the competition's importance, resulting in the registration of 39 teams.

The Moot Problem

A team was formed to draft the Problem. The team was assembled strategically to combine knowledge, specialization, and practical expertise in international arbitration cases with past experience in international and regional commercial arbitration moots to ensure that all the teams participating in the Arabic Moot would have the best and most beneficial experience possible in the competition.

The Problem

The Problem was written as a hypothetical case simulating the real world, revolving around a business deal made on the sidelines of the Future Investment Initiative Conference, the inaugural edition of which was held in Saudi Arabia in 2017. The deal involve a U.S. company making an agreement with a Saudi company to manufacture and supply of the Sofia 600 robot, which performs household chores using artificial intelligence, as per specifications and criteria appropriate to chores common in Saudi homes. The Saudi company intended to sell the robots in the Saudi market. A dispute arose between the two companies after delivery of the robots, which did not pass the specifications and standards tests. The companies disagreed in their interpretations of some specifications related to cooking Saudi foods, which led the U.S. company to file an arbitration claim with the SCCA.
